

Concluding Observations Human Rights Committee CCPR/C/IRN/CO/3 para 28

Full recommendation:

The State party should eliminate discrimination on the basis of sex with regard to the minimum age for marriage. It should also ensure that the minimum age complies with international standards and should adopt active measures preventing forced, early and temporary marriage of girls. (art 23, 24)

Assessment using Impact Iran human rights indicators<sup>1</sup>

Child marriage continues to be permitted under Iranian law. The legal minimum age for marriage is 13 for girls and 15 for boys.<sup>2</sup> However, children who have reached puberty can marry with parental consent and court approval.<sup>3</sup> The predefined age of puberty under the Islamic Republic of Iran, and the age of legal majority, is 9 lunar years for girls and 15 lunar years for boys.<sup>4</sup> Marriage before puberty is criminalised under Article 50 of the Family Protection Act<sup>5</sup>, while Article 646 of the Islamic Penal Code (2013) prescribes the punishment for such a crime.<sup>6</sup>

In 2018, a proposed amendment to Article 1041 of the Civil Code, that sought to raise the age of marriage for girls from 13 to 16 while allowing them to get married at a younger age with legal and medical approval, was rejected by the Parliament's Committee for Judicial and Legal Affairs.<sup>7</sup> In February 2019, the chair of the Committee stated that a "new plan" was to be introduced for the parliament's approval and that of the Guardian Council.<sup>8</sup> During its 2019 Universal Periodic Review, the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran also noted that bills that had already been drafted and were going through the adoption process dealt with the prohibition of early marriage, although they did not specify the age limitation. The Government additionally mentioned that it was raising awareness on the issue of child marriage in local communities.<sup>9</sup>

Between March 2018 and March 2019, the National Organisation for Civil Registration reported over 30,000 marriages involving girls between the ages of 10 and 14, including 209 marriages involving girls under the age of 11.<sup>10 11</sup> However, the number is likely to be higher as many child marriages are unregistered.<sup>12</sup> In January 2020, the Secretary General highlighted that “the Government [of the Islamic Republic of Iran] expressed the view that setting the minimum age of marriage, regardless of the cultural context, would increase unregistered marriages.”<sup>13</sup>

The Iranian Government established a National Body for the Convention of the Rights of the Child (NBCRC), which “set[s] up plans and programs to promote the rights of the child and the respect of their character” and monitors and assesses the implementation of the rights of children in the Islamic Republic of Iran.<sup>14</sup> The body is headed by the Minister of Justice, who appoints most of its members and officers, and includes three NGO representatives among its 23 members.<sup>15</sup> During the country’s 2016 CRC review, the National Body listed its main achievements, notably the holding of “specialised meetings on the role of religious leaders in preventing violence against children”, including early and forced marriage.<sup>16</sup> The National Body also listed the achievements of its working groups, notably its Legal and Judiciary working group, which conducted “analyses of the ways to end early marriage”, and its Support and Coordination working group which carried out an “analysis of the different dimensions of supporting children who are deprived of education and are victims of early marriage”.<sup>17</sup> There is no readily available information that might indicate whether these achievements have been impactful.

In its national report to the Universal Periodic Review in 2019, the Islamic Republic of Iran stated that it carried out “human rights training for judges, judicial officers and administrative staff on the rights of the child”.<sup>18</sup> However, there is no readily available information on the content of such trainings and whether they contained sessions on the harmful effects of early marriage on the physical and mental health and well-being of girls.

Despite various bills currently being reviewed which seek to prohibit early marriage in the Islamic Republic of Iran, girls and boys as young as 9 and 15 lunar years respectively can still get married under Iranian legislation, as of January 2021. In 2016, the Committee on the Rights of the Child stated that the legal age of marriage in the Islamic Republic of Iran “gravely violated rights under the Convention [on the Rights of the Child] and placed children, in particular girls, at risk of forced, early and temporary marriages, with irreversible consequences on their physical and mental health and development.”<sup>19</sup> Despite the work of the NBCRC, awareness-raising efforts in local communities and the trainings received by judges, judicial officers and administrative staff, early marriage remains a widespread practice in the country,<sup>20 21 22</sup> suggesting that governmental efforts are inadequate and/or insufficient.
