

Concluding observations Committee on the Rights of the Child CRC/C/IRN/CO/3-4 para 92(b)

Full recommendation:

Expediently implement the establishment of specialized juvenile courts and procedures with adequate human, technical and financial resources for all cases involving children, including those charged with the most serious crimes, designate specialized judges for children and ensure that such specialized judges receive appropriate education and training.

Assessment using Impact Iran human rights indicators¹

The revised Code of Criminal Procedure (CCP), which came into force in 2015, establishes a new type of court - juvenile court. Article 304 of the new CCP states that “All offences committed by children² and individuals who are under 18 solar years are investigated by the Court for Children and Adolescents.” However, the jurisdiction of such courts does not apply to crimes committed by individuals under 18 years old which, when committed by adults, fall under the jurisdiction of Provincial Criminal Courts.³ These crimes include offences punishable by the death penalty.⁴ In such cases, jurisdiction rests under the special juvenile branches of the relevant Provincial Criminal Court, where proceedings shall be governed by the same juvenile justice regulations as applied to the Court for Children and Adolescents.⁵ According to the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Court for Children and Adolescents does not have jurisdiction for cases where the accused person has reached 18 years old before the start of the proceedings, in which case jurisdiction falls under the relevant adult criminal court. The accused person shall enjoy all the privileges applicable to individuals who are tried by the Court for Children and Adolescents.⁶

The Committee on the rights of the Child explicitly stipulated that the “child justice system should apply to all children above the age of criminal responsibility but below the age of 18 years at the time of the commission of the offence.” The Committee further recommended member States to “ensure a non-discriminatory full application of their child justice system to all persons below the age of 18 years at the time of the offence.”⁸

² Under Note 1 to Article 304 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, a child is an individual who has not reached the age of puberty as defined in Iran under Shari'a as nine lunar years for girls and 15 lunar years for boys.

With regards to proceedings, the Special Office of the Prosecutor for Children is assigned to conduct investigations of offences committed by children between 15 and 18 years old. However, in cases of zena (“adultery” or “fornication”), lavat (“male-male anal penetration”), “offences against decency”, as well as some ta'zir offences (crimes carrying discretionary punishments) and in cases of crimes committed by children under the age of 15, investigations are directly conducted by the court and the judges who preside over the trial, in contradiction with international standards.⁹

Iranian law does not prescribe any limit on pretrial detention of defendants under 18. Nor does Iranian law present any procedural safeguards to protect the privacy of child defendants. In addition, there are no separate procedures for initiating investigations and issuing warrants against children or separating children vulnerable to domestic violence from their parents. The Iranian judicial system has established several procedural mechanisms to administer juvenile justice. However, the Islamic Republic still lacks a distinctive and comprehensive juvenile justice system that is geared toward the best interest of the child. While there are positive aspects to the new juvenile courts and juvenile branch of the criminal courts, these developments fail to bring Iran’s juvenile justice system in line with the Convention. Neither court system is constructed around the best interest of the child, nor are there any legal provisions requiring judges to take the best interest of the child into account during criminal proceedings.¹⁰

Designate specialized judges for children and ensure that such specialized judges receive appropriate education and training.

The Court for Children and Adolescents can convene with one presiding judge and one advisor.¹¹ The judges serving in the Court are directly appointed by the Head of the Judiciary. They must have at least five years of judicial experience. Other criteria such as their marital status, age, and whether they are parents themselves will be assessed in determining their eligibility for the position.¹² The Court will be assigned a number of male and female advisors, who are appointed for a period of two years.¹³ If the accused is a girl, at least one of the advisors must be a woman.¹⁴ There is no specification as to what kind of training judges elected to the Court should receive.

In its 2019 National Report to the Universal Periodic Review, the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran stated that “human rights training for judges, judicial officers and administrative staff on the rights of the child, the rights of persons with disabilities, the prohibition of torture and ill-treatment and the confronting against domestic violence,” have been carried out as well as “training courses on citizenship rights for judges, staff and judicial officers” and “sequential specialized sessions on the rights of the child by the National Body on the Convention on the Rights of the Child”.¹⁵ However, there is no readily available information that might indicate whether trainings of professionals in the child justice system of the Islamic Republic of Iran fully comply with the recommendations made by the Committee on the Rights of the Child in its General Comment No. 24 (2019) on children’s rights in the child justice system.¹⁶
